

UNDERSTANDING THE NGS INCOME ACCOUNT

The time of your life starts here.

FACT SHEET 9

1 JULY 2019

Are you nearing retirement and looking to start a regular income stream from your retirement savings? We offer an Income account and a Transition to Retirement account.

This fact sheet explains the NGS Income account. You can read about Transition to Retirement accounts in the Transition to Retirement Guide and fact sheet available at ngssuper.com.au/PDS

Advantages of the NGS Income account

The NGS Income account is a flexible and tax-effective means of converting your retirement savings into a regular income stream and has these advantages:

- you can nominate the regular income payment you'd like to receive each payment period (subject to government age-based minimum limits)¹
- flexible payment options – you can choose to receive your nominated regular income amount fortnightly, monthly, quarterly, half-yearly or yearly
- you can make lump sum withdrawals at any time (provided you receive at least the minimum pension payment each year according to your age and account balance)
- you benefit from tax-free investment earnings because your retirement savings stay in the super system
- a wide range of investment options, including options exclusively for members who have an NGS Income account
- in the event of your death, you can choose to have your income either continue to be paid to a dependant as a reversionary pension or paid as a lump sum to your dependants or your estate.

If you are age 60 or over, any payments made from your Income account are tax-free. If you have reached preservation age (see Preservation table on page 2) and are less than age 60, you will continue to receive concessional tax treatment when you receive income from your Income account.

Things to be aware of

Your investment returns in an NGS Income account are not guaranteed and depend on the performance of your chosen investment options. This means that you do not know how long your money will last.

If you are thinking about commencing an NGS Income account, consider obtaining professional advice to understand how this works for your personal situation.

We offer low-cost tailored advice through NGS Financial Planning. To make an appointment phone us on 1300 133 177 or complete the Financial planning enquiry form on our website at ngssuper.com.au/financial-planning

¹ If you commence an Income account part-way through a year, you can choose to receive the minimum annual amount or a pro-rata amount of the minimum based on the number of days left in the financial year.

Who is eligible for an NGS Income account?

In order to be eligible for an NGS Income account, you must have immediate access to your super benefit, having met one of the following conditions of release:

- you have permanently retired from the workforce after reaching your preservation age
- you have ceased a gainful employment arrangement on or after age 60, even if you have not permanently retired
- you have reached age 65
- you have become permanently disabled.

What is my preservation age?

Your preservation age is based on your date of birth and is as follows:

Preservation table

Your date of birth	Preservation age
Before 1 July 1960	55
Between 1 July 1960 and 30 June 1961	56
Between 1 July 1961 and 30 June 1962	57
Between 1 July 1962 and 30 June 1963	58
Between 1 July 1963 and 30 June 1964	59
After 30 June 1964	60

How does an NGS Income account work?

When you become eligible, you may choose to transfer part or all of your super balance to an NGS Income account provided the value of all your retirement accounts do not exceed the Transfer Balance cap which is currently $1.6m.

Your Income account can be made up of transfers from:

- some or all of your NGS Super Accumulation account (if you wish to make any further contributions to this account, you will need to do this before you transfer it to the Income account)
- rollovers from other super funds or pension accounts
- lump sum total and permanent disablement payments you receive from a super fund
- payments received as a result of commuting certain pensions or annuities into a lump sum.

You cannot make additional or ongoing contributions, including transfers, into your Income account once it has been established. All transfers and rollovers into your Income account must first be received by NGS Super before your Income account commences.

Once your Income account is established, you must receive a payment at least once during each financial year. This means that you must receive a minimum payment based on your present age and your account balance in order to comply with superannuation law.

If you are under age 60, any income payments you receive from your Income account will be taxed at your marginal tax rate, net of any tax offsets, plus the Medicare Levy. The amount of tax that applies to your income payments may be reduced by any tax-free amounts for which you are eligible and the 15% tax rebate.

Payments for members aged 60 and over are tax-free.

If you wish to include additional lump sums (if eligible) or rollovers from another super fund at a later time, this needs to be done by way of an NGS Super Accumulation account.

You can then choose to either:

- set up a second NGS Income account, or
- cease your current NGS Income account and commence a new account with the additional funds.

Note: If at 31 December 2014 you held an account-based pension and you were in receipt of the government aged pension, you will be assessed under the previous age pension income test rules for super pensions. The old rules allow for a deductible amount. Your annual income amount would be reduced by the deductible amount. The result is declared as income for the Age Pension income test.

However, if you cease your Income account and commence a new Income account, you will be assessed under the new deeming rules for the Income test for Account-based pensions.

This could potentially result in you receiving a lower or in some cases, no government age pension.

For more details, see our fact sheet Your super and the age pension available at ngssuper.com.au/PDS

The minimum amount that must be paid from your Income account annually is shown in the following table. The minimum is calculated on your age at commencement of your Income account (for the first year) and your age at 1 July each subsequent financial year.

Minimum payments

Age	Minimum ² % of account balance
Under 65	4
65–74	5
75–79	6
80–84	7
85–89	9
90–94	11
95 or more	14

² Where commencement is after 1 July, the minimum is proportional to the number of days remaining in that financial year.

LIVE THE RETIREMENT YOU'VE IMAGINED

Here's a worked Income account example

Mary has retired at age 58 with a gross (i.e. before-tax) lump sum benefit of $420,000, which she has chosen to rollover in full to an NGS Income account. As she has not reached age 60, Mary must declare her NGS Income account payments as part of her annual income tax return. During her working career Mary contributed $54,600 through after-tax (non-concessional) contributions, which she can claim as an annual tax-free amount against future pension income payments. In addition, Mary may claim the 15% tax rebate.

Mary must take a minimum pension of $16,800 (at least 4% p.a. of her account balance up to and including age 64) and can take a higher income amount if she wishes. As she is younger than 60, tax is payable on any taxable component that applies after all tax offsets have been taken into account.

If we assume Mary nominates to receive a gross income of $45,000 (in the first year), her income tax position would be:

Gross pension	$45,000
Less tax-free % amount	$5,850 ($$54,600/$420,000 \times $45,000$)
Adjusted taxable income	$39,150
Tax on taxable income	$4,271
Less Pension Rebate	$5,873
Less Low Income Tax Offset (LITO)	$413 ³
Less Low and Middle Income Tax Offset (LAMITO)	$265 ³
Tax payable⁴	$0⁵
Medicare levy payable	$783⁵
Net income	$44,217⁶

It is estimated that Mary will receive a net pension of approximately $44,217 until she reaches 60 years of age (assuming no change to the income amount she has nominated or to the marginal taxation rates).

³ The government announced changes to the LISTO and LAMITO as part of the 2019/20 Federal Budget. These changes have yet to be legislated and may result in a different outcome used in this example.

⁴ Please note that tax may be payable on any other personal taxable income received from other sources.

⁵ The tax payable on $39,150 income [after deduction of the Low Income Tax Offset (LITO) and the Low and Middle Income Tax Offset (LAMITO)] is less than the 15% tax rebate of $5,873 [$$39,150 \times 15\%$] therefore, Mary is obliged to pay the Medicare levy only until she turns 60.

⁶ From age 60, there will be no tax applicable (including the Medicare levy) so Mary's net income will be $45,000.

Income accounts and Centrelink

Income accounts count towards both the assets test and income test for social security purposes. This means that your Income account may affect your social security entitlements. The following information should only be taken as a guide – for more information, contact Centrelink.

For further details regarding your NGS Income account and the government age pension, refer to our fact sheet Your super and the age pension available at ngssuper.com.au/PDS

As social security laws are complex, you may wish to consult Centrelink or obtain professional advice from an NGS Financial Planner before you apply for an Income account.
